

Anti-sheep Sheep

By Guy Montag

As we battle against the narrative of the not-so-deadly virus, a new behavior is being fostered. And it isn't the sheep who are displaying it. Sheep will sheepily sheep along, sheepifying all that they can sheep. It is their nature. They are proud slaves through and through. The problem I wish to discuss today, lies with the keyboard warriors. Those who proudly proclaim their undying devotion to freedom and pushing back against the tyrannical edicts, yet don't push back against anything in the physical realm at all. These people go online, in every corner of social media, every comment section, forum, or anywhere else they can vent, and tell the sheep slaves how non-sheep they are. Yet, as soon as they leave the comfort of their computer room or couch, they instantly fold.

I guess this isn't all bad. I mean, at least they help a little to spread the word online. But the enemy doesn't attack only in cyberspace. The net is just a communication hub. As the tyranny expands, we need to push back against it more and more in real life. Eventually, as with all Totalitarian takeovers, we will all be physically confronted with it. Speaking out online only gets one so far.

I understand why so many only fight back online. They are scared. It's much easier to tell someone online to mind their own business about masking than it is to get in a sheep's face in real life. It's much safer to send rants of frustration to a Governor's website or Health Department's online discussion board and risk little to no repercussions, than it is to personally tell a tyrant or nanny-stater to back off. I get it. Unfortunately, I must now insert an analogy:

Imagine if you will that George Washington had a Facebook account, Youtube channel, and Instagram. Now think how the War for Independence likely would have turned out if he decided that it was much easier to just voice his opinion online, and not actually risk ridicule or threat of violence by actively engaging the British forces. If General Washington had fought his battles online, and online only, we would still be united British colonies, subject to the crown.

Talking tough online and not doing anything about it amounts to nothing. Those who are guilty, are what I call 'anti-sheep sheep'. They claim they are not sheep. And don't hesitate to speak out. Online that is. But as soon as they are confronted with reality, they show their true colors. Their true, woolly colors. (although the wool is usually a little shorter than the classic sheep. And not quite as filthy)

But wait! There is a cure! I promise!

The cure? Find courage. That's literally all there is to it.

I myself have traditionally been a somewhat timid person when dealing with confrontations and such. And I had to teach myself to come to terms with it. I did. Now, I don't hold back. We can't afford to hold back. There is far too much at stake. Sure, we will risk certain public displays of crying and stupidity from the sheep populace. We might even face the embarrassment of being publicly shamed as we are kicked out of a store. And we may even be threatened by a Government official (although their threats about mandates are null and void). But all these things mean nothing. Although, the fewer people we have to push back, the stronger and more determined the tyrants and sheep will become. We have strength in numbers. Let's not let those deplete as this thing progresses. And progress it will. That is the nature of struggle. It will get more difficult. It will attempt to wear us down and break us. But victory or defeat is determined by the side which could withstand the onslaught the longest.

In closing, I would like to say that I am not angry at those who will not fight with the rest of us. And I am grateful for their online truth battles. I fully understand the reluctance in 'taking it to the street'. But if we are going to win this thing, we need to break out of our comfort mold. The oppressors are relying on the non-sheep sheep to remain as such. Or even worse, become a full fledged sheep cult member. Don't give them the satisfaction. Burn your sheep costumes, and replace it with the hide of the wolf.

Until next time,

Guy Montag
